My dreams came true, and I became a system engineer at ECC headquarters. I want to be someone that people rely on in the company.

It was Japanese anime that sparked my interest in Japanese culture, history, and language. When I was a high school student, I thought I would go to a computer-related university in Italy and work in Japan in the future, but with my mother's encouragement, I decided to study in Japan. Through a study abroad support website, I found out that ECC was a famous school in Osaka with many international students, and I enrolled. At ECC, there are many teachers who speak various languages. They are like friends to me, and they helped me a lot in my daily life. ECC has an on-campus event called the "Chikyu-sai," which is like a school festival, and I have good memories of setting up a refreshment stand with my classmates. I was so happy to experience a school festival like I had seen in anime. Also, people in Kansai are very friendly, which was a great match for an Italian like me. After graduation, I thought about finding a job in the travel industry, but after all I decided I should do what I wanted to do, so I continued my studies at the ECC COLLEGE OF COMPUTER & MULTIMEDIA. At ECC, you have a good relationship with the teachers and staff, and the facilities are excellent too, which makes it a great environment for studying. Currently, I work in the information systems department at ECC headquarters, where I am in charge of maintaining and operating the in-house systems. The MOS* certification that I obtained while I was still in school has been very useful in my work. I want to be someone that people rely on, so in the company people will say, "If it's about IT, it'll be fine if you ask Davide!" And my dream is to live in Japan permanently and start a

I believe that if you really concentrate and work hard towards your dreams, you can solve any problems that you encounter. I also had a lot of problems at first, but I never gave up. Whenever you feel depressed or miss your family, if you talk to your friends, and guide your actions with the advice of other people who are in Japan right now, your worries and sadness will disappear.

I got a job at a travel agency, which was my first choice, and I'm also active as a staff member at ECC

I decided to learn Japanese because I was fascinated by the samurai, ninjas, and Chinese characters that I saw in books when I was little. Among many Japanese language schools, ECC had the best classes, which was the deciding factor for me. At first, I had no knowledge of Japanese, so I had a hard time getting used to life in Japan. I'd been planning to go back to Italy after six months, but I didn't learn enough, so I extended my course to one year. I've experienced many things at ECC, such as winning the first GEA*1, spending lunchtime talking with Japanese students at EJP*2 every day, and making friends who had the same dreams as mine. I also have good memories of going to visit the home of my Taiwanese friend's parents and experiencing Taiwanese culture. At first I didn't plan on senior student on campus from Travel Course at ECC KOKUSAI COLLEGE OF FOREIGN LANGUAGES, who was also Italian. That's why I decided to enroll in the same college. Even though thought it would be hard to do, I could get a job at TEI Inc. By studying at ECC, you can also gain the confidence to make your own way in society. Currently, I'm applying the knowledge of the Travel Agency Act and travel industry contracts that I gained in the Travel Course in my work as a tour guide. In the future, I'd like to work as a tour guide in Japan and abroad, and spend half a year each in Japan and Italy. My dream is to introduce the charms of Turin to the Japanese and the wonders of Japan to the Italian

To flourish in Japan, it's important to learn about unique Japanese manners and culture before coming to Japan. After all, visiting Japan as a tourist is completely different from actually living here. If you understand Japan, I think you'll be able to get along with Japanese people and enjoy your life in Japan. Good luck!

I want to contribute to the tourism industry in my home country, Vietnam. Making use of my strength in English, I aim to find a job at a travel agency

I studied English from the second grade of elementary school to high school. After I graduated from high school, my parents encouraged me to study in Japan because they thought it would be useful for my future career if I could speak Japanese as a third language. ECC is well known in Vietnam, and one of my someone who went there, I would feel safe. There are strict rules, entering the school, but everyone has their own goals, and the environment supports mutual encouragement and learning. The most memorable experience for me was in the Global Experience Program, held as a promotional project with the Osaka Prefectural Government. I had the opportunity to interact in English with high school students from Osaka Prefecture. Thanks to this program, I was able to improve my communication skills and develop my teamwork skills. I decided to go on to university so after graduating from the JAPANESE COURSE, I advanced to ECC's Further Education Preparation Course. Currently, I'm studying English, tourism-related classes, marketing, management theory, and business accounting at university. In the future, I'd like to return to Vietnam to work, but in order to gain practical experience, first I'd like to work for a Japanese trave agency that deals with the Southeast Asian travel market. I'd like to convey the appeal of my home country, Vietnam, to more Japanese people and contribute to attracting tourists and developing the tourism industry in Vietnam.

The most important purpose of studying in Japan is learning Japanese, so study as hard as you can! Also, rather then just studying and working part-time, you should also experience Japanese culture, participate in activities like volunteering, travel, and do things that you are interested in.

I want to start a business in the future. After studying in Japan, my goal is to find a job in Japan to gain experience.

Japan is one of China's major trading partners. In Shenzhen, where I grew up, there are many Japanese-affiliated companies, and I thought that if I could learn Japanese, I would have an advantage in finding a job in the future. After studying marketing and accounting at a university in the US, I immediately came to Japan and started studying at ECC. I chose ECC because it was recommended by my father's friend, it's a famous school, and it's located in Osaka. I think people in Osaka are open-minded, friendly, and kind. In Shenzhen, my hometown, people share a sense of solidarity and kindness, and the laid-back atmosphere is like that of Osaka. In the advanced class, we study Japanese not only from textbooks, but also by watching TV news. This is a great way to improve your Japanese language skills, and understand current issues in Japanese society at the same time. In the future, I'd like to make use of my Chinese, English, and Japanese skills to start my own business in the field of trade and travel. For that, the most important thing is experience. I'm now looking for a job so I can experience a Japanese workplace.

It's fine to make mistakes. Speaking more and more without being shy will help you master Japanese.

When I was in high school, I wanted to learn Japanese because I admired the way my aunt worked in a Japanese company in Taiwan using Japanese. ECC has the best reputation in Taiwan, and I thought it would be a good environment for me, even though the classes are tough. When I entered the school, it was just like I imagined it would be. Most of the teachers are kind, and they understand what the students want to say, which I think is really great. What I like most is the "speaking class." We can study grammar and vocabulary at home, but speaking is the most important thing to learn. We have fun in this class exchanging opinions through word association games and debates. After graduation, I'd like to work as a salesperson at a Japanese cosmetics company to gain experience, and then return to Taiwan to work in a job that uses Japanese, just like my aunt.

I love the cheerful, funny people of Osaka. I want to go on to university to study the Asian economy and establish a sustainable company.

My mother ran a sushi restaurant in Canada, so I've become familiar with Japanese culture by watching anime and eating Japanese food since I was a child. I studied fashion at a technical college in Canada, and when I came to Osaka on a working holiday three years ago, I lived with Japanese people in a shared house for a year. I was able to learn the Kansai dialect, and hear a wide range of expressions. I'm still very close to them, like we're part of a family. This experience made me fall in love with Japan and I wanted to live in Japan more, so I enrolled in ECC. The atmosphere in Osaka is like that of my hometown, Montreal, and everyone is cheerful, so I feel comfortable here. The teachers at ECC are kind and take good care of the students. I find myself naturally using the Kansai dialect pronunciation, and I often get cautioned about it in class! I couldn't read kanji characters and it was hard for me to fill out the contract documents for my mobile phone and bank account, but the staff helped me out. Thanks to this kind of help, I'm enjoying my life in Japan. In the future, I'd like to go on to university to study the Asian economy and create a new fashion company that considers the environment and child labor issues.

I gained an appreciation of different cultures through practical classes. I hope to make use of what I learn to

Yodthong Thanakorn / From Thailand

I'd been attending a Japanese language school when I was in Thailand, but I came to Japan to study at ECC because I wanted to put myself into a more challenging environment. The rules of the school are stricter than in Thailand, but the teachers and students are serious and create an environment where it's easy to learn. In the debate class, we're divided into two teams and exchange opinions, looking for our team's strong points and the other team's weak points. It demands understanding, but you can quickly learn more Japanese. Also, my classmates are from all over the world, so I'm exposed to new values. There are lots of surprises, as I discover things that are normal for me aren't normal at all, but it broadens my perspective. I graduated from a computer studies program at my university in Thailand, so I'm hoping to find a job at a Japanese game company. With both Japanese and programming, if you don't use them, you'll soon forget them. I believe that if you're going to work hard to study something, there's no point if you can't use it well, so I'm studying with the goal of improving.

I want to go on to university and become a dietitian at a hospital.

Seeing my growth through my test scores gives me confidence.

When I was in my third year of high school, I decided to study Japanese so I could go on to a Japanese university, because I was attracted by the work done by dietitians, which is not a common job in China. The child of one of my mother's friends is a graduate of ECC, and I decided to study here because I heard that the teachers at ECC support students with a sense of responsibility and kindness. The best thing about enrolling here is that there are tests two to three times a week. It's really fun to see the visible improvement in my scores on the practice tests. In the Japanese Language Proficiency Test Preparation (N1) class, which is necessary to work at a Japanese hospital as a dietitian, they introduce Japanese and world news as well as cartoons that are popular on social networking sites, so we can experience real Japanese. I also made Japanese friends through my volunteer social contribution activities, and my Japanese language skills improved a lot by playing with children. There are many tests, but that is also an advantage. I absolutely recommend ECC.

After graduating from a university in the UK, I worked for a bicycle manufacturer in Taiwan, but I wanted to learn Japanese to advance my career in Taiwan, so I enrolled in ECC. When I was at the beginner level, it took me about an hour to finish my homework, but at the intermediate level, I was able to take less time. Another good thing about ECC is that you have the chance to talk naturally with Japanese people outside of class. At first, I was enrolled in the one-year course, but I extended it to the two-year course because I wanted to learn business Japanese. Personally, I like bridges and old buildings, so I planned my own trips and interacted with many Japanese people in my travels. After graduation, I plan to ride my bike all around Japan! In the future, I'd like to work for a Japanese bicycle manufacturer, increase my knowledge, and return to Taiwan to do work that's related to bicycles.

It's the best environment to learn Japanese. I'd like to return to my home country after going on to university to study in the field of investiment.

I'd wanted to learn a foreign language other than English since I was a teenager, and after graduating from high school, my parents suggested that I study abroad and learn a language. That's why I decided to go abroad for language study. I chose Japanese because I thought it would be easy to learn, since the grammar is similar to Korean. Another reason was that I was interested in Japanese wooden architecture. I enrolled in ECC on the recommendation of my aunt who lives in Kobe. I thought it was easy at first, but it got harder and harder, and the tests included writing, conversation, and essay writing, so it was a little tough. However, thanks to the active use of Japanese by all my classmates, I could improve quickly, to the point that I've now been able to get a part-time job translating the campus news into Korean for the ECC website. In the future, I'd like to go on to university to study investment and then return to Korea to find a job.

It's a joy to be able to watch TV programs without subtitles.

Learning Japanese has broadened my interests.

Lin Zizhao / From Hong Kong

Admitted in April 2019

My interest in Japanese was sparked by Japanese anime. Unlike Hong Kong voice actors, I could tell that Japanese voice actors put a lot of emotion into their lines, and I wanted to be able to understand what they were saying, so I decided to study in Japan. It was unexpected even for me, but after coming to Japan, I really got into Japanese idols, and started to learn Japanese as a hobby even more than just something to study. Now I'm able to understand Japanese TV programs without subtitles, which makes me very happy. I'm also actively participating in the Buddy Program, where I can interact with Japanese students. We always have a lot of fun talking about Japanese culture as well as food from different countries. I think this is a program you can only find at ECC. After graduation, I'd like to go back to Hong Kong to work and save money, and then go to Spain or Korea to study abroad and experience different cultures. I think everyone has their own purpose for studying Japanese, but more than that, something might happen that you didn't even imagine. Try to broaden your horizons and take an interest in many things.

When I was in high school, I watched Seven Samurai and Rashomon and got interested in Japan, which led me to pursue a degree in Asian studies at a Canadian university. I studied Japanese for two years at university, but the rote learning method didn't suit me and I fell behind. But I couldn't give up, so after graduation and three years of working at the university, I enrolled in ECC. This time I really wanted to be able to speak Japanese, so I looked on the Internet and chose ECC because of its reputation for strict and thorough teaching. I wasn't confident at first, and I was nervous in class, but the teachers always had high expectations for us, so I came to believe that I could do anything if I worked hard, and my Japanese improved. I realized how important the learning environment is. In the future, I'd like to go on to graduate school to study computational linguistics while continuing with Asian studies, and use my skills to become a bridge between Japanese and Western cultures.

I enjoy talking with Japanese people. In the future, I'd like to support people coming to Japan from Vietnam.

Nguyen Tuan Tai / From Vietnam Admitted in April 2019

I became interested in the Japanese economy when I was at university, and I wanted to find a job in Japan, so I decided to study in Japan. Now I'm studying Japanese and learning about the economy by watching the news every day. In the future, I want to start a company to help Vietnamese trainees and Vietnamese people who are looking for jobs in Japan. I entered ECC on the recommendation of my sister. Right after I enrolled, I didn't understand Japanese at all and traveling was difficult, but I enjoyed talking with Japanese people, so I actively communicated with them. For example, at a ramen shop, I would talk with the staff doing the cooking in front of the customers. In Vietnam, you can't see the cooking area and the staff don't talk to the customers much, so it was an interesting experience for me. Thanks to these experiences, I've made more Japanese friends.
